Facing My Sin

Lesson for May 10, 1959

LAST WEEK something was said about David learning a hard lesson the hard way: namely that not even a king, an absolute monarch, is so highly placed that the law of God no longer concerns him. David lived in a time when in most kingdoms the king's will was law. Even if what he did was wrong for most people, if he did it he couldn't be wrong, for he was king. The brave prophet Nathan brought David to his senses; he made him face his own sin. The whole story is there in II Samuel, and has often been told. We can learn much from it; for it shows one way in which we can do what we all hate to do and some people never can do: face our own sins and admit that they are sins and that we committed them.

Dr. Foreman

To Know

"You can't carve rotten wood," says an old Chinese proverb. And no prophet or preacher is going to get far making any one face his sins if the person involved has no notion of any difference between right and wrong. A conscience can be educated; but who can educate what isn't there? Now David had a conscience; that is, he knew that some things are right and some are wrong. When Nathan told him that made-up story about the rich man and the poor man and the lamb, David was hot. The rich man was wrong, David saw; very wrong, wrong enough to be executed on the spot. If David had reacted calmly to Nathan's story—if his response had been something like, "Well, that's a rich man for you," or "After all, that poor man was relieved of an expensive luxury," Nathan would have got nowhere with him. The first thing I need in order to face my sin, when that time comes, is to know, down in my bones, that sin is real, that some things are right and others are wrong. If I think "right" and "wrong" are just emotional words, meaning no more than "I like it" and "I don't like it," then I shall never face my own sin, I shall never even know what is eating away my soul.

To Imagine

Another thing is needed before I can face my sin. I must be able to imagine what it is like to be sinned-against. When David got so angry about that story Nathan told him, he wasn't angry about what had done some wife-stealing even before the time of Bathsheba, but he had never seen the wrong in it. Wife-stealing was a recognized privilege of kings in those days. By a brilliant, inspired angle thrust when David's guard was down, that prophet made David see as it were in one flash what he had done to Uriah and to Bathsheba.

To Confess

There is a step beyond seeing that I have sinned. This is admitting that I see it. But there are two ways of admitting one's sin, whatever it may be. One is the "so what?" approach. "Yes, I did it, but it isn't very bad . . . Yes, I admit it, but I couldn't help it . . . I did it, but am I so much worse than a hundred other people? . . . Yes, I did it, but why not forget the whole thing, shall we?" This is not facing my sin at all. It is only admitting an act without seeing what a sin it is. The other way of admitting sin is to feel a deep sense of shame before God and man too. It is to stop excusing and defending myself, it is to take sides (so to speak) with the prosecution, it is to see myself no longer fit to be a companion for God or men. If what I can feel about my sin can be expressed in the language of the 51st Psalm, then there can be some hope for me. If I do not despise my sin, if I do not somehow share God's feeling about it, then I shall go on down and down. It is only when I see the pit into which I am falling, and see that it is a bottomless pit, that I am ready to be rescued.

JACK HENRY NAMED STAR FARMER BY F. F. A.

Jack Henry, son of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Henry, of Spout Spring, has been named Star Farmer of the Robert E. Lee F. F .A. Chapter. Jack is a senior student at Appomattox High School and is chapter reporter for the local Future Farmers of America.

Jack was named Star Farmer of the year for the local chapter because of his outstanding all-around vocational agriculture — F. F. A. programs. This, plus superior leadership in chapter activities helped to win this honor. A gold pin symbolizing the award was presented to Jack at the Chapter Father-Son Banquet by Mr. W. C. Dudley, area Supervisor of Vocational Agriculture. Mr. Dudley is shown above presenting the award.

In his supervised farming program for the current year, Jack is carrying: three Hampshire brood sows and one registered Hampshire boar; 7 acres of wheat; 18 acres of corn; 22 feeder hogs; one dairy cow; and one grade sow. Improvement projects and supplementary farm jobs under the program include: constructing a tractor lift, constructing a farm trailer, constructing farm gates, constructing hog hauling crate, constructing loading chute, constructing a farrowing house for hogs, reseeding hog pasture, and tractor maintenance among others.

Henry's program is an example of a well-rounded vocational-agriculture program. It is similar to one which every farm boy studying vocational agriculture in high school might have — if he has the ambition and energy to work for it and the cooperation of his parents or other landlord. Jack Henry had these needed ingredients and applied them.

LEGION AUXILIARY POPPY PROGRAM

Miss Nancy Lewis, daughter of Mr. and Mrs .Cabell Lewis, of Appomattox, who was introduced by Mrs .Burke Guill, Poppy Chairman of the American Legion Auxiliary, Unit 104, presented a poppy program before the Unit on Monday night, when the Auxiliary met in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Martin Webb. She used as her subject, "Wearing a Poppy Pays Tribute to Nation's War Dead."

"A little red flower helps to keep bright the memory of America's fallen defenders. Poppy Day has one outstanding purpose —to honor the nation's war dead, by wearing a memorial poppy. In 1914-1919, amid the devastation of the World War I battlefront, in Belgium and France, the poppy was the only flower that bloomed in the new earth of the cemeteries where so many of our men had fallen in battle."

The members of the American Legion Auxiliary will sell poppies here on May 23. They will be aiding the war's living veterans, as well as paying tribute to the dead. The contributions aid the veterans in relief work. These poppies, of course, are not the natural flowers of the battlefield, but they have an even great significance. They have been made in hospitals by disabled veterans where suffering is still going on. Disaled veterans can make these in their beds. This also aids in their recovery, occupies their minds, and hands, breaks the idleness and restores the spirit .

Budget Check Is Requested

Appomattox Supervisors are asking for a ruling as to whether or not the county budget adopted last month provides for "local money for "general educational purposes" and thus leaves the way clear to use the tax funds for private school tuition grants; or, whether the budget commits the school money to operation of regular public schools. The Comonmwealth Attorney has been asked to secure such a ruling.

In event the ruling is that the budget is not legally safe in providing for leeway in use of the money, it is likely that the budget already adopted will be rescinded, and a new budget proposed.

The remainder of the action at the monthly meeting of Supervisors consisted of routine business.
